

The Behaviour of Moths

POPPY ADAMS

virago

VIRAGO

First published in Great Britain in 2008 by Virago Press
This paperback edition published in 2009 by Virago Press

Copyright © 2008 by Poppy Adams

The moral right of the author has been asserted

All characters and events in this publication, other than those clearly in the public domain, are fictitious and any resemblance to real persons, living or dead, is purely coincidental.

All rights reserved.

No part of this publication may be reproduced, stored in a retrieval system, or transmitted in any form or by any means, without the prior permission in writing of the publisher, nor be otherwise circulated in any form of binding or cover other than that in which it is published and without a similar condition including this condition being imposed on the subsequent purchaser.

A CIP catalogue record for this book is available from the British Library.

ISBN 978-1-84408-488-3

Typeset in Bembo by M Rules
Printed and bound in Great Britain by
Clays Ltd, St Ives plc

Papers used by Virago are natural, renewable and recyclable products sourced from well-managed forests and certified in accordance with the rules of the Forest Stewardship Council.

Virago Press
An imprint of
Little, Brown Book Group
100 Victoria Embankment
London EC4Y 0DY

An Hachette UK Company
www.hachette.co.uk

www.virago.co.uk

Contents

FRIDAY

1	Lookout	3
2	The Bell-tower	6
3	Vivien, a Small Dog and the Missing Furniture	24
4	Belinda's Pot	40
5	The Monster, the Thief and Pupal Soup	53

SATURDAY

6	Methodology	67
7	Breakfast	81
8	The Apprentice	95
9	Another Trap	107
10	Bernard's Challenge	119
11	Arthur and the Cannibals	126
12	I Spy	141
13	The Ridge Walk	147
14	Vivien's Day Out	156
15	In Remembrance of Pauline Abbey Clarke	169
16	A Nuclear Test and Titus	189

SUNDAY

17	A Prayer	205
18	The Bobble-hat Woman and the Leaflets	232
19	The Moth Hunter	248

MONDAY

20	About Monday	265
21	Pranksters and a Second Dose	274
22	PC Bolt and Inspector Piggott	288

TUESDAY

23	Intuition	299
----	-----------	-----

TODAY

	Acknowledgements	307
--	------------------	-----

FRIDAY

1

Lookout

It's ten to two in the afternoon and I've been waiting for my little sister, Vivi, to arrive since one thirty. Finally, she's coming home.

I'm standing at a first-floor window, an arched stone one like you'd find in a church, my face close to the diamond-shaped leaded panes, keeping lookout. For a moment I focus on the glass and catch the faint, honest reflection of my eye staring back at me, a lock of grey straggly hair in its way. I don't often look at my reflection and to peer at this moment directly into my eye feels more disconcerting than it should, as if I can sense I'm about to be judged.

I pull my wool cardy – an old one of my father's – more tightly round me, tucking the loose end under my arm. It's dropped a degree today, the wind must have changed to easterly during the night, and later we'll get fog in the valley. I don't need a barograph or a hygrometer, these days, I can sense it – pressure changes, a shift in humidity – but to tell the truth, I also think about the weather to help me take my mind off things. If I didn't have it to ponder right now, I'd already be getting slightly anxious. She's late.

My smoky breath turns to liquid as it hits the window and, if I rub the mist into heavy droplets, I can make it trickle down the glass. From here I can see half the length of the grassy drive as it winds through the tall, skeletal limes on either side, until it disappears right, curving downhill towards East Lodge and the lane and the outside world. If I move my head a fraction to the left the drive elongates and the tops of the limes veer suddenly to the side, distorted by the imperfections of handmade glass. Moving it a little to the right splits the beech hedge in two on either side of a bubble. I know every vagary of every pane. I've lived here all my life and before me my mother lived here all her life and, before her, her father and grandfather.

Did I tell you that Vivien said in her letter she was returning for good? For some final peace, she said, because now, she said, we ought to be keeping each other company for the rest of our lives, rather than dying lonely and alone. Well, I'll tell you now, I don't feel lonely and I certainly don't feel as if I'm dying but, even so, I'm glad she's coming home. Glad, and a little nervous – a surge of apprehension is swelling in my stomach. I can't help wondering what we'll talk about after all these years and, I suppose, if I'll even recognize her.

I'm not, as a rule, an emotional person. I'm far too – how shall I put it? – level-headed. I was always the sensible sister and Vivi the adventurer, but my excitement at her impending arrival even surprises me.

She is late, however. I look at my wristwatch – the digital one on my left wrist. Her letter most specifically read one thirty and, believe me, it's not my time-keeping that's gone awry. I keep a number of clocks just so I can be sure that, even if one or two let me down, I'll always find the correct time. When you live by yourself in a house you rarely leave and is even more rarely visited, it's essential that you don't lose track of the time. Every minute lost – if left uncorrected – would soon accumulate to an hour, and then hours, until, as you can imagine, you could easily end up living in a completely erroneous time frame.

Our mother Maud and I were always waiting for Vivi: in the hall before we went to church or shouting for her from the landing to hurry up for school. And it's now, as I wait for her again, that I find snippets of our childhood jumping into my head, slices of conversation, things I've not thought about since they happened: our first pair of boots, which Vivi had chosen for us, long black ones that laced to the top; long afternoons in the summer holidays spent damming the brook to create our own tributaries and islands; sneaking into the loggia at harvest time to drink cider before taking it to the men in the fields; giggling with Maud at Clive's rare excitement when he created a Six-spot Burnet with five spots; our first trip to boarding-school, holding each other's clammy hands with shared anticipation, squeezed among the chemical bottles in the back of Clive's car.

It was a childhood in perfect balance so I'm wondering what it was that came along and changed everything. It wasn't just one thing. There's rarely a sole cause for the separation of lives. It's a sequence of events, an inexorable chain reaction, where each small link is fundamental, like a snake of up-ended dominoes. And I've been thinking that the very first one, the one you push to start it all off, must have been when Vivi slipped off our bell-tower and nearly died, fifty-nine years ago.